Clubs skirt loosie laws

► Individual cigarettes sold in posh places under city's nose ► Bathroom attendants risk $1,000 fine or even jail for selling cigs ► High taxes or high demand create black market?

A bottle of vodka may cost $500 at a New York nightclub, but bathroom attendants risk $1,000 fines every time they sell a cigarette.

Bathroom attendants in several posh drinking spots are selling individual cigarettes, or loosies, for a buck a piece. It's a misdemeanor under city and state law, but some wonder if the city is looking the other way when it comes to cracking down on loosie sales at upscale locales.

More than 5,000 people have been arrested for selling untaxed cigarettes and tobacco products in New York City since 2008, and 247 so far this year, according to the NYPD.

Russell Novak, an attorney with Legal Aid who often defends people who hawk loosies on the street, said he has never heard of a bathroom attendant being charged with the crime.

► An attendant sells loosies in the bathroom of The Ainsworth bar in Chelsea.

EMILY ANNE EPSTEIN/METRO

"It's an interesting enforcement question. Why is one tolerated and one is not?" he asked.

At Financial District gastropub The Fulton, Metro discovered a bathroom attendant selling loosies next to gum, candy and deodorant. When Metro approached him, he said that he wasn't "selling" the cigarettes, but expected a $1 tip if a client wanted to smoke one.

Novak said that sort of argument wouldn't hold up in court.

"It's a novel theory," Novak said. "Would it fly in court, probably not. It's a real crime."

Novak said that people who sell loosies are traditionally charged with unlicensed vending under city law or the sale of untaxed tobacco, a state law.

One of his clients who sold loosies on the street in Midtown, Lonnie Warner, has been arrested dozens of times for the crime, even spending time at Rikers. According to state law, first-time untaxed tobacco offenders are hit with a $1,000 fine and repeat offenders are charged with a felony.

Software engineer Dan Fried, 26, of Sunset Park said that he's seen many bathroom attendants peddling loosies at high-end places in the Meatpacking District, Midtown and Murray Hill.

"They cater to people to whom high-endness is important," said Fried. "[It's] a very particular kind of bar or club."

"The bathroom attendants are hustlers," he added. "I don't know if they know it's illegal."

Hard to monitor?

It's hard for owners to track everything inside their businesses, said Andrew Rigie, of the New York State Restaurant Association.

► Matt Shendel, president of Paige Management Group, which runs The Fulton and The Ainsworth, said he had no idea what was going on in his bathrooms. "We employ independent contractors and know nothing about it," Shendel said.

► A spokeswoman for the city Health Department said she didn't know anything about loosie sales at nightclubs, but Health Department inspectors who observe the sale of loose cigarettes will cite the businesses.

Leave the loosies alone

Andrew Rigie, of the New York State Restaurant Association, said the sale of loosies in nightclubs was once commonplace.

"As long as there's a demand for something, there may be an employee that will try to sell cigarettes," said Rigie, who said the NYSRA encourages restaurants to follow the law.

Samantha Miller, 26, of Williamsburg suggests the expensive cigarette prices in the city support bathroom attendants' illegal business. "It should be legal. Sometimes you just want one," she said.

Boy, 8, shot in arm in the Bronx in 'ride-by'

SOUNDVIEW. An 8-year-old boy did not cry after he was shot in the Bronx Tuesday night, instead thanking a store owner who tried to stop the bleeding and comforting his mother.

The boy was shot at around 8 p.m. in the shoulder while he was inside a store at the intersection of Randall and Rosedale avenues in the Soundview neighborhood of the Bronx. The gunman rode by on a bike and fired into the store, cops said, in a "ride-by."

The bodega owner told the New York Post, who identified the boy as Armando Bigo, that

It is unclear how the man got off the tracks, but he was later taken to Woodhull hospital in a stable condition. Police said the two

In the fall of 2010, Marquise Herbert got into a fight near his Bronx apartment. He was arrested, pleaded guilty and eventually received five years of probation.

His probation officer then sent him to the Police Athletic League's RISE program, which offers job placement and other services to teenage boys ages 16 to 19 who have been involved with the criminal court system.

"We want to empower them to take control of their lives," said RISE's founder, Bobby Ferazi.

Herbert, now 18, admits he was skeptical at first.

But he now says the program has helped him mature and get valuable work experience, including an internship in the Police Athletic League's grants department.

New York is one of only two states that processes 16- to 18-year-olds in the adult criminal court system rather than in juvenile court. "If they're convicted they're sent to Rikers Island," said Bobby Ferazi of PAL, who added that a felony charge can follow them for life. "They may as well have an 'F' tattooed to their forehead."

Keep them out of trouble

bert said about his RISE program supervisors. "They just really want to get you on track."

In another success, he also recently passed his GED test and plans to attend college this fall.

RISE was created in 2008 as an offshoot of the Police Athletic League's Youth Link program, which helps kids ages 11 to 16. Originally, RISE only had enough money to hire one part-time social worker, but this January a Capital One grant kicked in that will allow it to hire a full-time job developer and a full-time social worker.

The Capital One money will also pay for internships at PAL and for externships at restaurants, retail stores and elsewhere.

Right now, RISE has an active caseload of about a dozen teenagers, but Ferazi hopes to ramp that up to 50 or 75 by the end of the year.

"We ultimately want to track them for years to make sure they stay employed," Ferazi said. "We don't want to just put a Band-Aid on this."

Opinion

Helping troubled youth

The Police Athletic League serves 46,000 youth living in the most challenged communities of the city, which have the highest rates of poverty and juvenile crime. With the support of PAL education, sports and recreational activities, our youth gain the tools to become productive adult members of society.

PAL is unusual in that it also reaches out into the community to reconnect youth, who are truant from school, are under 16 and on probation, or who have fallen prey to youth "crews," causing them to be incarcerated at Rikers Island.

With the proper support, role models and positive activities, these youth can "RISE" beyond their experiences to have the chance to become our future leaders.

— Alana Sweeney is executive director of the Police Athletic League.

Metro does not endorse the opinions of the author, or any opinions expressed on its pages.

What is the Police Athletic League?

In 1914, the then-commissioner of the NYPD, Arthur Woods, asked his police officers to do more than just fight crime: He wanted them to help some of the neediest New Yorkers in their precincts. Woods was particularly concerned about the lack of open space for New York City children to play and he started a city-wide search for vacant lots, which could be converted into playgrounds.

Today, the organization Woods founded, along with Lower East Side police captain John Sweeney, is now known as the Police Athletic League, a nonprofit that helps set up safe recreation areas, after-school programs and mentoring for kids and teens.

Once a month, Metro will feature updates about what the Police Athletic League is doing and how they are working to help make New York City streets healthier and safer. ● METRO

Officials propose bill to ban shark fins in NY

EMILY ANNE EPSTEIN/METRO

► A bowl of shark fin soup can cost anywhere from $35 to $100.

New York City lawmakers are sinking their teeth into a hot debate over shark fins.

Legislation proposed Tuesday would make it illegal to possess shark fins in New York state. Flushing Assemblywoman Grace Meng co-wrote the bill, saying sharks are rapidly disappearing because they're brutally slaughtered worldwide.

Shark fin is a traditional ingredient in Chinese cooking; right now, more than 50 restaurants in New York City serve the delicacy. It's typically found in shark fin soup, which can command anywhere from $35 to $100 per bowl.

"As a Chinese-American in New York, there are few symbols of greater wealth and property than shark fin," said Meng. "That being said — just because something has been a tradition, it doesn't mean it's necessarily right."

More than 100 million

14,000

Nearly 14,000 pounds of shark fin valuing
$685,747 was imported into New York in 2011, according to the National Marine Fisheries Service.

sharks a year are killed for their fins, according to Oceana, an international organization aimed at ocean protection. In international waters, shark fishers will often pull the animal on board and slice its fin while it's still alive before tossing it back into the ocean to drown. U.S. law prohibits finning at sea; the shark must be brought back to port to be processed.

"It's an important part of culture, but it is something that is very cruel," said Meng.

All types of sharks are targeted, though some species, like whale sharks and hammerheads, are more valuable than others.

Shark fin soup is not an everyday dish in Chinese culture; it's traditionally served by the wealthy. Though the dish isn't as popular among younger generations of Chinese-Americans, it is often a staple at functions like weddings.

"If there's no shark fin, they'll maybe have to pick another option, like watercress," said Melissa Chen who works at Jin Fong, a Chinatown banquet hall that serves several varieties of shark fin soup.

Chen said she didn't think her customers would be too disappointed if shark fin was no longer available. Other Chinese restaurants, like Bo Wing Hong, have even already begun phasing the ingredient off their menus.

Could ban translate to elite popularity?

Sometimes a highly publicized controversy over food, such as debate over foie gras and bluefin tuna, can actually boost its popularity among diners looking to savor a taste of something exotic or elite, one food expert says.

Conrad Saam, vice president of marketing for Urbanspoon, cited Chef Ludo Lefebvre of LudoBites on the West Coast. An anti-foie gras protest outside his restaurant spurred a bevy of foodies looking to sample the dish in question.

"This is a microcosm of what happens in the market," Saam explained. "Protests drive awareness, which in turns drives demand." ● METRO/CG

Banned in other states

If legislation is approved, restaurant owners and consumers would have one year to use the shark fins they already have. After that, possessing shark fins could lead to thousands of dollars in fines and up to 15 days behind bars. California, Hawaii, Oregon and Washington have already enacted similar legislation. ● METRO/CG

Bloomberg defensive as fury grows over NYPD Muslim spying

► Mayor Michael Bloomberg argues that Muslim surveillance keeps the city safe.

The American Civil Liberties Union and the New York Civil Liberties Union yesterday called on Mayor Michael Bloomberg to investigate alleged NYPD spying on Muslim students, even though Bloomberg defended the NYPD's actions on Tuesday.

When asked at a press conference, Bloomberg said he does not understand why Yale University officials would have a problem with NYPD officers following their students.

An Associated Press report Saturday revealed that NYPD officers tracked Muslim college students upstate and while they attended colleges out of state. The police even sent one undercover officer on a white-water rafting trip with students.

The report alleged that officers followed people through student websites at Yale, the University of Pennsylvania, Rutgers and 13 other schools.

Yale President Richard Levin called the surveillance "antithetical to the values of Yale."

But Bloomberg disagreed, saying, "I don't know why keeping the country safe is antithetical to the values of Yale."

"Of course we're going to look at anything that's publicly available," he added on Tuesday.

NYPD Police Commissioner Ray Kelly has defended the police department's actions, saying officers only follow leads.

The NYCLU and ACLU disagree, saying the surveillance amounts to religious and racial profiling.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and Newark Mayor Cory Booker expressed outrage that the NYPD spied on Muslims in Newark. "(This) strikes against my fundamental beliefs as an American," said Booker.

ALISON BOWEN
alison.bowen@metro.us

College officials speak out in anger

Yale President Richard Levin e-mailed a statement to all students, condemning the NYPD for monitoring his university's Muslim student associations:

"I am writing to state, in the strongest possible terms, that police surveillance based on religion, nationality or peacefully expressed political opinions is antithetical to the values of Yale, the academic community, and the United States," Levin wrote.

Rutgers University requested an investigation into the monitoring, according to the AP, and Columbia University's spokesman told the wire service that the school "would obviously be concerned about anything that could chill our essential values of academic freedom or intrude on student privacy."

France calls journalist deaths in Syrian attack 'assassination'

AMMAN. Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's forces rained rockets and bombs down on opposition-held neighborhoods of the city of Homs, reducing buildings to rubble and killing more than 80 people, including two Western journalists.

The barrages marked an intensification of a nearly three-week offensive to crush resistance in Homs, one of the focal points of a nationwide uprising against Assad's 11-year rule, and prompted further international condemnation.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy described the deaths of the two journalists, French photographer Remi Ochlik and American Marie Colvin of Britain's Sunday Times, as an assassination and said the Assad era had to end.

"That's enough now," Sarkozy said. "This regime must go and there is no reason that Syrians don't have the right to live their lives and choose their destiny freely. If journalists were not there, the massacres would be a lot worse." REUTERS

Santorum at center stage in GOP debate

Rivals heaped criticism on surprise front-runner Rick Santorum in a debate among Republican presidential candidates last night, hoping to stall his surge at a pivotal period in the 2012 campaign.

Mitt Romney and libertarian Congressman Ron Paul tried to raise doubts about Santorum and questioned his fiscal conservative credentials based on his time in the U.S. Congress when he was an easy backer of government spending projects deemed wasteful by critics.

Paul, asked by CNN moderator John King why he had launched a campaign ad that labeled Santorum a "fake," responded: "Because he's a fake."

Romney, scrambling to make up for a deficit in the polls to Santorum, put the former senator from Pennsylvania on the defensive for backing a much-derided $400 million "bridge to nowhere" project in Alaska that was eventually abandoned.

Santorum fired back that Romney, as chief organizer of the 2002 Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City, had sought similar government spending items known as "earmarks" and often deemed wasteful spending.

An NBC/Marist poll yesterday had Romney at 37 percent to Santorum at 35 percent among likely primary voters in Michigan, a statistical dead heat. REUTERS

Poll: Obama still winning

Mitt Romney and Rick Santorum are running neck-and-neck but neither would beat incumbent President Barack Obama, according to several polls released yesterday. Polls by The Associated Press/GfK and NBC News/Marist show Santorum has gained enough to close in on Romney, who had been seen as the most likely nominee in a Republican field that still has four candidates vying for the party's nomination. REUTERS

Obama's tax plan

President Barack Obama launched a dialogue with corporate America yesterday over business tax reform, offering his first clear plan to cut the corporate tax rate, with little prospect of it becoming law in an election year. He proposed cutting the top corporate tax rate to 28 percent from 35 percent. This would address U.S. corporations' long-standing gripe about the rate being too high.

Romney seeks to cut top tax rate

Republican Mitt Romney, looking for a boost in his presidential campaign, proposed an overhaul of the tax system yesterday that he said would cut Americans' tax rates by 20 percent and limit deductions for the wealthy. Romney unveiled his proposals just hours after President Barack Obama offered a plan of his own to revamp the corporate tax system, calling for a cut in the corporate tax rate and the closure of many business tax loopholes. REUTERS

@METROPOLITIK

Mitt Romney finally said something smart — though his campaign insists it was unintentional. “As you cut spending, you’ll slow down the economy; so you have to, at the same time, create pro-growth tax policies,” Romney said on Tuesday.

By “pro-growth tax policies,” Romney probably means net tax cuts for corporations and the rich, not tax increases. Nevertheless, Mitt Romney does appear to be arguing that cutting government spending can hurt the economy.

It seems Mitt Romney is trying to have his Krugman and eat it too.

Economist Paul Krugman has long argued that our protracted economic mess is a liquidity trap caused by insufficient aggregate demand.

To put it another way, families lost so much net worth after the financial crisis that they can no longer afford to buy as much stuff. Consequently, businesses refuse to grow because they might get stuck making a bunch of stuff that no one can afford to buy. So they don’t hire new people or give anyone a raise, which of course perpetuates everyone’s inability to buy more stuff.

Cutting government spending worsens the problem, because what little spending money families have left is preserved by government programs like Medicare, Medicaid and federal college loans.

Some people rely on government jobs, such as police, firefighters and teachers. Every spending cut to these and other programs further reduces total demand for goods and services in the economy.

Or as Krugman put it, in response to Romney: “Yep, slashing spending in a depressed economy depresses the economy even more. And if you don’t have to ... you should wait until the economy is stronger.”

Instead, Krugman argues that the government must kick-start demand (and, in doing so, private sector growth) by borrowing a bunch of money and spending it on projects that not only put extra spending money in people’s pockets, but get them to actually spend it instead of saving it.

Tax cuts for the wealthy don’t accomplish the latter. Corporations are already sitting on $2 trillion in unspent cash, and studies of the Bush tax cuts indicate that the wealthy tend to save their tax cuts.

Sadly, both parties find the concept of spending our way out of recession to be so violative of common sense that few in Washington are courageous enough to lend their full-throated support to Krugman’s proposals.

Even President Obama’s economic advisors — who privately agreed that a return to full employment would likely necessitate a much larger stimulus — were so wary of trying to sell Congress on the counterintuitive wisdom of Krugman’s arguments that they removed the strongest argument for a larger stimulus from their final recommendation to the president.

So it was that Mitt Romney, momentarily and perhaps entirely by accident, gave a false glimmer of hope to those who watch in dismay as the president and the Republican candidates race to outdo the other’s proposed spending cuts. And Washington cheers while Rome burns.

Identity theft on the rise due to smartphone use

Nearly 12 million Americans were victims of identity theft in 2011, an increase of 13 percent over 2010, according to a report released by the research firm Javelin Strategy & Research.

The rise in the use of smartphones and social media by in-cautious consumers fueled the increase in identity fraud, and 2011 was a year of several big data breaches too, Javelin said.

With the rise in credit card monitoring and more sophisticated policing by credit card companies, identity thieves are increasingly targeting users of smartphones and social media where consumers have a tendency to be less cautious, experts say.

"The message is not that people should let their guard down," Javelin founder and President Jim Van Dyke said. "The challenge that we have is that criminals often change faster than everyday consumers or businesses."

The number of people whose information was accessed in a data breach increased by 67 percent in 2011, largely due to some very high-profile thefts, such as the attacks on Sony Corp's PlayStation network in April.

Someone whose personal information is taken in a data breach is 9.5 times more likely to become a victim. REUTERS

Internet pirate wins extradition battle

GETTY IMAGES

U.S. crime-fighters failed in a bid to keep alleged Internet pirate Kim Dotcom behind bars yesterday when a New Zealand court freed him from jail and instead put him under effective house arrest and banned him from using the Internet.

The court, in upholding a bail application by the German founder of file-sharing website Megaupload, cast some doubt on the multimillionaire's purported flight risk pending an extradition hearing scheduled for August.

"I'm relieved to go home and see my three little kids and my pregnant wife," a smiling Dotcom, 38, said after the ruling.

He vowed to fight the eventual extradition hearing on U.S. charges of copyright piracy, racketeering and money-laundering. REUTERS

Chavez faces fresh surgery for cancer

CARACAS. Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez's imminent departure for more cancer surgery in Cuba has thrown his re-election campaign into uncertainty and shaken the socialist leader's passionate supporters.

Though the 57-year-old played down the dangers of his condition, the announcement raises questions over his ability to stand for the October presidential vote — or rule beyond it.

Chavez, who has dominated Venezuela since taking office in 1999 and whose fierce anti-U.S. rhetoric has turned him into one of the world's best-known leaders, said he will head back to Havana for the next operation by the weekend.

He said a two-centimeter lesion had been discovered in his pelvis where surgeons removed a baseball-sized tumor in June, and that there was a high probability it was malignant. REUTERS

Six die in Afghan Koran protest

KABUL. Afghan President Hamid Karzai appealed for calm yesterday after officials said six people were shot dead and dozens wounded in protests over the burning of copies of the Koran, Islam's holy book, at NATO's main base in the country.

The U.S. embassy said its staff were in "lockdown" and travel had been suspended as thousands of people expressed fury over the burning through protests that flared for a second day in several cities.

It was a public relations disaster for U.S.-led NATO forces fighting Taliban militants ahead of the withdrawal of foreign combat troops by the end of 2014.

The U.S. government and the American commander of NATO-led forces in Afghanistan apologized after Afghan laborers found charred copies of the Koran while collecting rubbish at the sprawling Bagram Airbase, about an hour's drive north of Kabul.

Levine's got moves like Jagger

Adam Levine "doesn't want to screw up" his relationship with Russian model girlfriend Anne V.

In an interview on "The Howard Stern Show" on Tuesday, "The Voice" coach Adam Levine proved himself to be smart about some topics and not so bright on others.

Stern tried to get Levine to gossip about fellow mentor/judge Christina Aguilera's recent weight gain — "Why do you think she's gotten so heavy? Is she upset?" Stern prodded. "She used to be so f—ing hot ... And her clothes are too tight, right?" the shock jock continued. "When you're a plus-size woman, you can't wear the tight clothes anymore."

Levine responded diplomatically, stating: "I'm keeping my f—ing mouth shut."

Smart of him, right? But then when the topic veered to birth control and what method Levine uses with his Russian model girlfriend, Anne V., the singer actually told the truth. "This is the longest, most functional relationship I've ever been in. I don't want to screw it up," he said. "[I use] a fool-proof birth-control system, [the pull-out method]."

Gross. Isn't there a law on the books that says all men in rock 'n' roll bands have to use condoms? It's a severe public health problem if not.

Lindsay Lohan received a positive report at her probation hearing yesterday in Los Angeles. Lohan completed 15 days of community service at the L.A. Sautner told Lohan she has seen a "positive change," adding that it appears the actress is "getting [her] life back on track." The judge refrained from saying anything about that wig, however.

Show off your pearly whites

Thinking about having your teeth whitened? Dr. Jennifer Jablow, who has beautified the smiles of the Victoria's Secret Angels, fills us in.

How does Boost, a treatment you offer, work?

Boost is an in-office procedure. It's about between 35 to 40 percent hydrogen peroxide — what you get over the counter in white strips is between six and nine percent. [We apply this for] three 15-minute cycles. For 48 hours after you are more vulnerable to staining because the pores in your teeth that the oxygen pulled the stain out of are still open.

What's the deal with the Zoom procedure?

The Zoom is a 45-minute treatment. It's a whitening gel that's applied in three 15-minute cycles. It's about 35 percent peroxide as well and it has what's called a UV Halide light. There's controversy on whether the light really makes it work better. I have to say, I've been having just as good if not better results with Boost. And people find it more comfortable. You don't have to stretch your mouth out, you don't have the light sitting at your jaw.

Will whitening toothpaste help?

If you turn around "whitening toothpastes" they'll have a little asterisk on them: It'll say, "removes superficial stains." That's not true whitening: True whitening is when it goes into the tubes of the teeth where the pores are, where the real stains accumulate. Usually those toothpastes either have not enough peroxide to whiten, or none at all, because a good, professional level of peroxide cannot be in the same tube as fluoride or it'll react and never come out of the tube.

Besides coffee and red wine, what are some foods that easily stain teeth?

Anything with pigment. Vinegar, because it's so acidic. Acidic foods and drinks soften the teeth and make them more porous to stain. Blueberries are terrible, but you should eat them because of the antioxidants. Eat your blueberries, but use a stain eraser after. [With a stain eraser] you don't have to stop eating things that you like.

What are some foods that'll keep your teeth white?

Very crunchy, fibrous foods naturally brush the teeth. Carrots, celery, apples and cruciferous vegetables — they're all great.

The science of love

Science has told us so many definitive things about the way our world works, but matters of the heart are still largely a mystery, no matter how much study has been dedicated to figuring out how the human brain operates when in love. Just ask Kayt Sukel, author of "Dirty Minds: How Our Brains Influence Love, Sex and Relationships." Sukel investigated a wealth of neurological studies meant to suss out our genetic tendencies when it comes to mating, but her inspiration to do so came from a very relatable place.

"I was looking for the same thing that anyone with a broken heart trolling the self-help aisle was," she says. "I was looking for some actionable advice — something that sort of made sense and really explained what love was. That's not exactly what I found. I didn't find those 'five ways to make him love you.' I didn't find any rules."

Disappointing? Sure. Sukel

Q&A

Which animal is the closest to humans in terms of mating?

"A little rodent called the prairie vole," Sukel says. "Not only do they pair-bond for life, but they're also alloparentals — which means that both the moms and dads take care of the babies. They're the best model we have to study these kinds of behaviors especially in terms of looking at the brain and what's going on there in terms of neurochemical genetics."

says that so many factors can affect the brain's behavior that it's close to impossible to come up with any hard-and-fast rules of human behavior when love is involved.

"I found that our brains are plastic, love relationships are complicated even down to the cellular level and whenever you introduce all of these variables together, you get a different situation every time," Sukel says.

But there is one bit of validation Sukel found that will be useful to any woman who has been the victim of infidelity.

"There's this whole camp that says that men are built to cheat," Sukel says. "That its just their evolutionary strategy, but we've evolved also with this huge frontal lobe and of course that's the center of decision-making and morality. We've come a long way from the idea that our biology compels us. There's always a choice."

'Always hit on the wingman'

► And other bits of wisdom from Glamour magazine's male advice columnist, 'Jake' ► Though his identity remains a secret, one of the last men to hold the title reveals his best insights for helping women find love

Jake has been around the Glamour magazine offices since 1956, doling out advice to single women. No, this is not a dude in his mid-70s still discussing the finer points of "booty calls." Many men have shared his name, and the title can be held only as long as the man giving the advice is still single. Well, one Jake in particular had to hang up his columnist hat recently, but he has continued to share his wisdom with a new book. "Always Hit on the Wingman ... And 9 Other Secret Rules for Getting the Love Life You Want" offers 10 great tips that will help women relax and learn to love the dating game. In order to protect his anonymity, we e-mailed to asked Jake a few questions about the book.

This advice about hitting on the friend of the person you're interested in is great, but I'm wondering if you could offer additional advice about fending off the slightly misled wingman. Eye contact. It's all about eye contact. While you're making chit-chat with his nice but neutered friend, give your target the odd glance. You don't need to shoot arrows directly into the target's bullseye, just send a few warning shots his way. Let him know his friend doesn't have all your attention.

Men say that they love to be hit on, but there's the school of thought that insists that men want to be the ones to chase.

What are your thoughts? We definitely love to chase. That doesn't mean we don't want to be hit on. This back-and-forth defines the art of flirting — and to some extent,

Q&A

What's the number one thing that women get wrong about men when it comes to dating?

► Not taking control; playing the dating "game." If you like a guy, stop reviewing the 150 tips your friends and magazines have given you about "making him like you," and walk over and buy him a drink. What's the worst thing that's going to happen? It takes confidence to do that. Confidence is the sexiest.

the art of dating. It happens from the very first glance (who looks at who first?) to the first intimate moment (who undresses who?). It's the world's most complicated and hilarious and maddening and sexy game of tag. You're it. Name one fictional character who embraces all 10 of your rules, and why?

Joey Potter, from "Dawson's Creek." She lived across the creek from Dawson and was his best friend. Then she fell in love with him, and then his best friend fell in love with her. And so on. Hollywood is disastrous in its representation of women and Joey was a rare standout character. She knew how sexy she was — Joey's smarts made her a prize and she rocked them, hard. She made Pacey wait for the right time for sex, didn't pretend to care about sports, and, if it's not obvious: She knew to hit on the wingman.

It's not too early to prepare for summer!

For happy campers, ask these questions

► The right summer camp can be the highlight of a child's summer, and memories from there will stay with him or her for life ► Whether it's a day camp, a weekend camp or one that lasts for weeks, these are the things to consider when choosing a summer camp

Is the camp accredited?

Your child's safety is the paramount issue here, so ask a lot of questions before you sign up. Is the camp accredited by the American Camp Association, and can they provide references? Have they been recently inspected for compliance in all requirements — and if so, were there any incidents of failure? How often are campers repeat guests? Are you allowed to visit your child and inspect the facilities?

Are camp employees and volunteers rigorously screened?

Summer camp is no place for a child molester, but they tend to gravitate to where children are. Are all staff members — including full-time employees and volunteers — rigorously screened? Are felons hired? Is a physical required? All of these questions are important to the safety of your child.

How much

experience does

the staff have?

► How much experience and training does each staff member have in childcare, CPR and first aid? What training is required before hiring? How much experience do they have in their areas of expertise such as water activities, horseback riding, camping, hiking, archery and so on?

Are there emergency and disaster plans in place?

In the event of an emergency or disaster, what is the summer camp's procedure for caring for the children and notifying parents? Is there a safe place in case of flood or tornado? Can sick children be quarantined until parents pick them up? Are there regular fire and disaster drills? These are all questions you have a right to ask.

What is the camp diet?

Most summer camps offer a balanced diet; but if your child has food allergies such as a peanut allergy, you need to know they will not be exposed to those foods. As the public becomes more aware of the dangers in some foods, food establishments are making a greater effort to omit these foods from their menus. This includes summer camps. PAMELA KAY FOR HELIUM.COM

Virginia, where women's rights die

For both chambers of the General Assembly of Virginia to pass legislation that requires transvaginal ultrasounds of women seeking abortions and cuts state aid to poor women seeking abortions is outrageous! I have a new slogan for the state of Virginia. "Virginia: where women's rights are nonexistent."

ROBERT LA ROSA, WHITESTONE, NY

It's a woman's choice (with her husband, family, etc.) to create life — and therefore to not create life, which is not murder, as believers say. As in medicine and much else, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Vasectomies are covered, so all safe birth control should be too.

J. ANDREW SMITH, BLOOMFIELD, NJ

Re: 'Read a book — no, another book'

Thank you Michael, for your clear summary of Rick Santorum's twisted views on science. I'm also struck by the duplicitous irony of his arguments centering on humanity's "dominion over the Earth." He claims that it's best that humanity is in charge of the planet because "we're intelligent and we can actually manage things." But when people raise legitimate concerns (driving species to extinction, releasing toxic materials, altering the planet's climate, etc.) regarding those management skills, he then dismissively labels them as Earth-worshippers. If we have people running the government who can't distinguish between what they'd like the world to be and what is actually going on, then how are any of our problems going to get solved? With lots of aspirin, perhaps?

KARL HUFFMAN, VIA E-MAIL

"Rick Santorum accused President Obama of holding a 'phony theology' that places the environment over humans."

Somehow, it is insincere to the point of pretension to believe that our planet needs to be protected. Santorum may not intend to pillage the Earth of its bounty, but I am dismayed that he chooses to characterize the beliefs of those who do care about the planet and the possible negative effects human activity has upon it as phony.

DAVID TERHUNE, BROOKLYN

Mr. Frosch misses one small point in his otherwise excellent column, namely how Santorum's own words prove him a hypocrite. If, as he claims, humanity was put on this Earth as its steward, that gives us a God-given obligation to care for and maintain it. Santorum rejects such an obligation and seems happy to ravage the land down to the bedrock, leaving literally nothing for future generations. That this man is considered worthy of the presidency is utterly horrifying.

JOSEPH CONNELL, BROOKLYN

Re: 'New war debate' letter

The statement "If Israel strikes Iran, it will NOT be because of any nuclear threat. Follow the money!" is the purest nonsense you've ever printed.

PAUL SIMONS, VIA E-MAIL

Horoscope

♊ Pisces Feb. 20-March 20. When you take on a leadership role it becomes you — timidity doesn't.

Don't be afraid or hesitant to assert yourself if and when conditions require you to do so.

♈ Aries March 21-April 19. Although you're normally a very gregarious and outgoing person, you do have your withdrawn moments. It's likely to be one of those days.

♉ Taurus April 20-May 20. As long as your hopes and expectations aren't based on a selfish premise, things will have a way of working out quite well for you. Sometimes it pays to yield to your own inclinations.

♊ Gemini May 21-June 20. If you're unobtrusive when going after a personal objective, things will work much better for you. Do what needs doing without using others to accomplish your aims.

♋ Cancer June 21-July 22. By not taking yourself or life too seriously, it could turn out to be a productive day for you. As you go about your duties, treat life philosophically and roll with the punches.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 22. It's an excellent time to get to the bottom of a matter of profound personal importance. Your abilities to probe, dig and detect are likely to be much sharper than usual.

♍ Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22. When you find yourself able to bounce ideas off people whose intelligence you respect, it could be especially rewarding and enlightening.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23. Because the dull and the ordinary tend to turn you off, try to focus on creative or imaginative projects as much as you can. You'll be proud of the productive results you get.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22. Your concern for the well being of others will be very apparent to everyone with whom you're involved. This facet of yours is what makes you so popular with your friends.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21. Nothing will give you more gratification than finishing what you start. It will be especially meaningful if it's something that you've wanted to get to for a long time.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19. Try to do what Kipling suggested many years ago: Dream, but don't make dreams your master; think, but don't make thoughts your aim. Use your mind for practical, productive purposes.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 19. Interesting financial conditions surround you. There's a chance you might sell something you don't possess, but have in inventory and can easily get your hands on.

The Meatball Shop

We're not sure if the mark of a good meatball shop is its beef or its vegetarian ball, but The Meatball Shop excels at both. The premise is simple: your choice of meatball and sauce, served on a roll, over greens or "naked." For dessert, it's house-made ice cream sandwiched between two homemade cookies. Shops have popped up in the West Village and Lower East Side, and the new Williamsburg location includes a cozy bar.

basik

Previously Phoebe's, East Williamsburg locals have embraced basik's civilized bar food since it opened last December. Start with a tangle of boquerones (white anchovies) sprinkled with lemon and parsley, or the deviled duck eggs. To drink, try a Poppa's Pride, a mix of bourbon, ginger and lemon, conceived when Arcade Fire singer Win Butler asked bartender Jay Zimmerman to "make me a drink that my grandfather would be proud of." Butler ordered four that night.

NATHAN PRESLEY

Pointed 'Arrow'

"Arrow" was the first album Wennerstrom had written for the band as a quartet. In many ways, she says it resulted in less pressure: "The songs always had that space, and I attempted to add those additional parts myself. This is the first time we have been able to make use of that space in a cohesive way. On 'The Mountain,' it was studio musicians filling the spaces. I feel like my guitar playing is a bit limited," she adds humbly. "I hear a sound that I'm not always capable of playing, and Mark's able to add to the songs what I don't feel capable of."

There's only one course of action when you're a band called Heartless Bastards and your album is ready for release in mid-winter. Release it on Valentine's Day. Especially if it's titled "Arrow" — as in the sharp thing that is Cupid's trademark.

"The title is pure coincidence," insists front gal Erika Wennerstrom. "Our label thought it would be funny to release a Heartless Bastards record on Valentine's Day."

Wennerstrom, however,

remember release dates anyway, and she agreed.

"I couldn't remember the release date of any album I've ever bought," she says. "I thought, 'It's funny, let's go with it.'"

On a personal and personnel level, "Arrow" is the calm after a considerable storm. Wennerstrom's breakup with her bassist/boyfriend was well documented on their third album, "The Mountain," but the "Mountain" touring lineup of drummer Dave Colvin, bassist Jesse Ebagh and guitarist Mark Nathan coalesced while making "Arrow."

"As people, we're a team," says Wennerstrom. "I feel I'm in a good place in my life and have gotten back to who I am. Where the band is at right now is where I've always wanted to be, musically. It took me a while to get there."

JBird Cocktails comes to roost on the Upper East Side

► Come spring, JBird Cocktails will start a garden out back for growing spices and herbs.

The renowned and well-traveled vets behind the Midtown speakeasy JBird are opening a second branch on the Upper East Side. JBird Cocktails brings eats into the equation and creates a drink bistro (dristo?) vibe via marble two-tops, distressed windows, leather banquettes and walls ranging from exposed brick to purple paint.

Tipples are dominated by fresh takes on centuries-old standbys, from a rye Manhattan touched up with chamomile grappa and elderflower bitters to old-fashioned like the gin, kaffir lime, celery bitters Thornybush. There's also the anejo, cherry bark, vanilla bitters and mezcal drink named Brush of the Bush.

Putting the same dedication into the food, everything from bacon to butter is made onsite, with nibbles including roasted marrow with sweet and sour cipollini and mushrooms to quail egg-topped sliders filled with pork shoulder braised in cider.

Real-deal dinner, meanwhile, includes a "nine spice" lamb chop with saffron and fregola, salmon a la plancha with lemon-thyme beurre blanc and an heirloom polenta from the Finger Lakes.

If a cheap, plastic doesn't belong in your living room, neither does a cheap, plastic window.

The problems with cheap windows:

- Even through normal temperature changes, vinyl and fiberglass expand, contract, warp and leak.
- Only staples, screws and glues hold them together, so when their seals break, and their insulating gas is gone, so is your comfort.

The Fibrex® window is the solution:

Lin leads Knicks win

► Point guard continues solid play, posts 17 points, nine assists in blowout
 ► Team led by 25 at the half ► Huge game against Miami awaits tonight

The Knicks were able to accomplish a multitude of missions last night in their 99-82 pummeling of the undermanned Hawks.

Not only was head coach Mike D'Antoni able to tinker with different lineups on the floor, but the Knicks were also able to rest key players in preparation for tonight's critical matchup in Miami.

The Knicks (17-17) were never really threatened, as they used a 16-0 first-quarter run to stymie a Hawks (19-14) squad that was without all-star swingman Joe Johnson.

Five players reached double-figure scoring, led by Jeremy Lin's team-high tying 17 points. Lin also added nine assists and two steals.

The Knicks came out the gate so dominant defensively — a phrase rarely uttered during D'Antoni's tenure — that the Hawks shot only 35 percent from the field, including zero percent from 3 (0-for-9). For the game, Atlanta shot 40 percent from the field, including just 27 percent from 3.

Atlanta went on a 19-2 run during the third quarter to get within 14 but the Knicks showed their superiority by going on a 17-2 run of their own in the fourth quarter to put it out of reach.

► Lin looked much more in sync with Carmelo Anthony, who had 15 points on 7-of-16 shooting.

The bench spearheaded the fourth-quarter charge, as Baron Davis, J.R. Smith and Steve Novak were the leaders.

Amar'e Stoudemire had a quiet game, but did add seven points and 10 rebounds, while Landry Fields added 15 points and seven boards.

TONY WILLIAMS
 sports@metro.us

What went right ...

1 Spread it out — Every player who checked in for New York got into the scoring column, as D'Antoni was able to go deep into his bench. Tying Lin with 17 points, including five 3-pointers, was Steve Novak, while swingman J.R. Smith had 12 points off the bench.

2 Broken wing — The Hawks' lone all-star, swingman Joe Johnson, didn't play which meant there was a huge void for Atlanta. The Knicks capitalized as their wings, including guard Landry Fields and forward Carmelo Anthony had nice games.

3 No comeback — There's been little correlation between a Mike D'Antoni squad and defense, but tonight was a breakout game. They held the Hawks to just 35 points in the first half. ● METRO/TW

In the news

Shumpert out
 Knicks rookie Iman Shumpert won't be bringing Jeremy Lin to the Dunk Contest after all.

Shumpert has pulled out of the contest with a left knee injury he sustained against Dallas on Sunday. He's now missed the Nets and Hawks games.

Lin was supposed to be Shumpert's helper. Instead, fans will have to settle for Utah's Jeremy Evans.

Baseball power

Chicks dig the long ball. That's why getting these big bats later in drafts is vital:

1 Paul Goldschmidt, 1B, ARZ — The 6-foot-3, 244-pounder smashed 30 homers in the minors last year and then eight more after a late-season callup. He's now locked into the starting role in a hitter's park.

2 Ike Davis, 1B, NYM — The devastating ankle injury is behind him, and the fences at Citi Field have been brought in. Davis won't be 25 until March, but already has 26 homers in 183 career games.

Top NBA pickups

Isaiah Thomas

► PG, Kings
Thomas was the last pick in this year's draft and is 5-foot-9. He's also an explosive playmaker and new starter.

Andray Blatche

► PF, Wizards
Blatche (calf) is expected back soon after the All-Star break. His $35 million contract means he'll start again.

DON'T SLEEP ON PITCHERS

The game plan sounds simple: Power hitters and speed early in drafts, starting pitchers later on.

That's an unexploitable strategy, until our ERA and WHIP spiral out of control before April ends. The only way it works is if we know what starters to target in the middle-to-late rounds.

Ex-closers

Pitchers often become closers because they throw hard and strike people out. That's also the kind of upside we're looking for in our starters. This year, ex-closers Neftali Feliz (Rangers) and Chris Sale (White Sox) are expected to get their shots every fifth day. Daniel Bard (Red Sox) and Aroldis Chapman (Reds) are also starting candidates.

Pitcher's parks

When we think about ballparks where runs go to die, the first place that comes to mind is San Diego's Petco Park. That's what makes Cory Luebke so exciting. Max Scherzer is off a down year, but still calls Detroit's cavernous confines home. And for a deep sleeper, Oakland's Brandon McCarthy had a 2.65 ERA at home last year.

► Neftali Feliz is trying to make the switch to starter.

Young guns

When all else fails, we look for young prospects with impressive pedigrees. We know that Tampa's Matt Moore fits the bill, while Atlanta's Mike Minor and Texas' Yu Darvish have major upside as well.
